

Benjamin jumped without having second thoughts. He fell down and down and then landed on something soft like a mattress. He felt happy because the fall didn't cause any harm. He might be miles under the earth.

Benjamin saw sun rays from another half-opened door in the depth he fell into. "If I'm miles under the earth, how can I see sunrays?"

He slowly walked towards the bright door with trembling feet and opened it fully. It was an entrance to a street. He was more pleased than ever before. "I've found a way out!" he shouted with joy.

A familiar street? It looked just like the Albert drive. If he was in the Albert drive, there was nothing to worry about. "But is it possible to reach Albert Drive miles away from the earth?" Benjamin thought with astonishment.

However, he wanted to come out of the confusion. He saw a man waiting for a bus nearby and he went slowly towards him.

"Excuse me, am I in the Albert drive?" Benjamin questioned hiding his curiosity. "Yes son, you are," he replied with a smile. "Thank you, sir," Benjamin whispered. He couldn't understand what was going on.

Benjamin was sitting on a bench sinking deep into his thoughts when suddenly a car stopped on the road in front of the bench.

A young gentleman and a young lady who had blue rounded eyes with curly black hair descended.

Benjamin was astonished to see them. "My parents?"

Then the lady came near Benjamin and hugged him. Benjamin didn't understand anything and he became dumbfounded. "Where were you, son?" Mother inquired in her usual loving voice.

"We were searching for you almost everywhere," Father exclaimed.

Benjamin was amazed to see them and couldn't utter a single word. But, he was elated to see his parents again. "I've lost my way," he whispered after a few moments trying to figure out this utterly confusing situation.

"Now everything is fine," exclaimed Mother cheerfully. "We will go home," she said.

She took Benjamin's hand and got into the car. Benjamin still couldn't believe his senses and his heart was overwhelmed with the familiar warmth as well as disbelief. He pinched himself so hard to make sure he was not seeing a dream. "Ouch!"

"What's wrong darling?" his mother hugged him tight and the familiar fragrance of her perfume further proved he was not dreaming.
